

Miguel Vallinas

Madrid based photographer Miguel Vallinas Prieto began his "Segundas Pieles" ("Second Skins") series with the intention of "investigating the animal in us all". This whimsical photo series sees various animals dressed in contemporary outfits, posing as typical human models would. The clothes appear to match their personalities, acting as a true second skin.

Miguel also attempts to depict the way he imagined different animals would dress if they had the ability to, Vallinas plays off our preconceived ideas of what our clothing choices signify and what we may, even subconsciously, believe about certain animals, certain people and ourselves.

Unsurprisingly, Miguel didn't actually wrestle a roll-neck onto a swan or sweet-talk a hippopotamus into donning a Barbour. The taxidermied specimens are photographed in various museums and private collections, while each outfit is modelled by volunteers in Miguel's studio. The two images are then spiced together by the artist.
