Press Release

The mineral world fascinates us with its eternity, its solidity and its poetry. It is a material that speaks to us of millennia, of the long span of time, and of stability. But it also speaks of transformation, movement and light: a stone is never quite still, and its veins, its rough edges or its translucency tell a story far older than our own. From crystals to marble, from raw rock to precious stones, artists have continually drawn on this material to explore our relationship with time, nature and beauty. This week, we present a selection of works in which minerals take on the forms of sculpture, landscape, precious objects or material for daydreaming.
